Welcome to Tolmie State Park

Tolmie State Park is a marine, day-use park situated on Nisqually Reach, a few miles from the state's capitol city, Olympia. The forested park features 1,800 feet of saltwater shoreline on the Puget Sound and offers an underwater park built by scuba divers.

Popular for beachside activities and scuba diving, the park also includes a saltwater marsh and profuse wildlife. Three-miles of hiking trail within the park lead visitors through an estuary ecosystem, saltwater marsh and forested land.

The park provides five mooring buoys for boaters to tie up and stay overnight on their boats. A moorage fee is required for buoy use.

Nearby overnight accommodations

Tolmie State Parks is a day-use park and does not offer overnight accommodations. Camping accommodations are available at nearby Joemma Beach State Park. There are 19 standard campsites, two water trail campsites available to campers arriving on human-powered watercrafts and two primitive campsites for hikers and bicyclers at Joemma Beach State Park. Maximum campsite length is 40 feet. All campsites at Joemma Beach are available on a first-come, first-served basis.

Park history

Tolmie State Park, as well as regional geological features and plant life were, named for Dr. William Fraser Tolmie (1812-1886). A doctor of medicine by degree, Tolmie served 16 of his years with the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Nisqually as a physician, surgeon, botanist, fur trader and eventually the fort's Chief Factor.
